Adam Jackson

Chief Investment Officer

Adam Jackson is Stream's Chief Investment Officer and responsible for managing four opportunistic discretionary funds totaling over $1.5 billion of equity. Adam leads a cross-functional team of professionals located at the company's headquarters in Dallas, as well as providing strategic direction to hundreds of professionals in the firm's 15 local offices.

Adam is responsible for the design and execution of the strategic direction and initiatives of Stream's Investment Platform. These responsibilities include directing the company's investment activities, managing Stream's fully discretionary investment funds, and the origination of key partner relationships. Since joining Stream in 2008, Adam has led approximately $4 billion of acquisitions and developments totaling 30 million square feet.

Additionally, Adam is a member of Stream's Investment Committee; the co-chair of Stream's ESG Committee; and the founder of Stream's Scholarship Foundation. Given his network based on 18+ years of industry experience, Adam also plays an integral role in attracting new talent to join the organization.

Prior to joining Stream, Adam worked at HFF, LP, where he specialized in arranging acquisition and development debt/equity financing, as well as investment sales totaling over $1 billion in transactions. Upon graduating from Texas A&M University with a Bachelor of Business Administration and Master of Science in Accounting, Adam began his professional career at Ernst & Young in their audit and advisory practice.
